

Descendants of Richard Worrell of Great Budworth, Cheshire, England

The following lineage chart is a result of forty-five years of researching the Worrell family. It is my mother's maiden name. My original research on this line covers Cheshire, England, Isle of Wight County, Virginia, Southampton, Virginia, Northampton, Craven, Dobbs, and Wayne Counties, in North Carolina and Gibson, Dyer, Obion, Carroll and Crockett Counties in West Tennessee. It has been interesting to note that many of the families the Worrells married into migrated with them from Isle of Wight County, Virginia to Wayne County, North Carolina, and then on to Tennessee. My database, naturally, continues the lineage to my family, but there are many of the family groups in North Carolina who have been given, as well.

The origin of the Worrell family is found in Cheshire, England where the Wirrall Peninsular, of that shire, juts out into the Irish Sea. It is believed that Norsemen from the Isle of Man founded the little group of villages that inhabited the Wirrall in its early history. When William the Conqueror began the recording of the various landholdings in England, it was found that the system used on the Wirrall and surrounding area differed from the system used in other parts of England. The Wirrall, between the estuaries of the Mersey and Dee is 12 miles in width and 7 miles long.

Four children of my ancestors, Needham B. and Mary Alford Worrell, of Wayne County, North Carolina, migrated to Gibson County, Tennessee where their descendants are found in that county and the surrounding areas today. Needham B. Worrell is No. 17 on the following chart. Alfred Worrell was the first of his children to migrate and he is found in the marriage records of Gibson County, Tennessee marrying Harriet H. D. Crain, in 1837. I believe he migrated with William Alford and his family who are listed in the 1830 Census and 1830 Sheriff's List of Gibson County, Tennessee. William Alford was a relation and probably an uncle of Alfred. The Howells, Boytes, Runnels, Peacocks, Gardners, Bells, Tolars, Yorks, Edmondsons, Flowers, Griffins, Greens, Reasons, Popes, Mitchells, Pipkins, Iveys, Grants, and many others found in Gibson County, and its surrounding counties, migrated from Wayne County, North Carolina.

This lineage chart is presented to those researchers who are interested in finding their roots. It, like all research, may have its errors. There has been some input from others in the Wayne County, North Carolina genealogy, but the descendants of Needham B. Worrell has been my research except the information on James Harvey Worrell, Mary Worrell Cates's, and Gardner families.

(Census, marriage, will, deed, cemetery, tax, grant, birth, social security and burial records have been used in compiling this lineage. Some information was gleaned from ancestral records and GenForum discussions on the Internet. Prior to the advent of the computer, many hours were spent in the courthouses, libraries, and cemeteries of Tennessee gathering this material.)

Generation Six

25. James Worrell (David, Richard, Richard R., Richard, Richard) was born in 1739 in Craven County, North Carolina. He died in 1838 in Wayne, North Carolina.

Birth date of James Worrell is calculated from the following article concerning his age when he sold his farm to Wayne County, North Carolina

James Worrel fought in the Revolutionary War at Moore's Creek Bridge. He served in Captain Thomas William's Company.

James Worrell was a member of Thomas Williams' Company of the Dobbs County Militia. This militia fought at the famous battle of Moore's Creek in February of 1776 in the preludes to the Revolutionary War. Moore's Creek is located in Pender County of North Carolina. This battlefield is now a national park maintained by the United States National Park Service.

The Moore's Creek Bridge Campaign, viewed from a perspective of nearly 200 years assumes greater importance than in 1776. Had the loyalists reached the sea, it is not unreasonable to suppose that their ranks would have been swelled considerably by the Tories of the coastal areas. If a junction had been made with Governor Martin, and arms in sufficient number acquired, large numbers of loyalists and Regulators would have flocked to the royal standard. Time, terrain, the sea. Richard Caswell and James Moore cooperated to frustrate Tory hopes.

One of the intangibles fell on the negative side. The success of the militia in this engagement so raised the appreciation of the occasional soldier that North Carolina consistently fell short of her quota of troops for the Continental Line throughout the remaining years of the American Revolution.

Perhaps the most positive result of the victory was that it possibly played a significant role in North Carolina's decision, on April 12, 1776, to instruct her delegates in the Continental Congress "to concur with the delegates of the other colonies in declaring independency...." As early as April 5, Samuel Johnston had suggested this when he wrote from Halifax that "all our people here are up for Independence."

(Excerpted from The North Carolina Continentals, by Hugh F. Rankin, The University of North Carolina Press, 1971)

(The following article is printed from Historic Wayne County, North Carolina under Early Wayne Buildings, 1975)

On August 17, 1833, the court appropriated funds that the Wardens of the Poor could erect a "Poor House". Previously monies had been dispensed in many places to accomplish this end. This was obviously the first poor house in the county. Thomas Horn was Warden of the Poor and his committee was composed of some of the best known men in the county: Mark Pike, Waitman Thompson, Soloman Pope, Raiford Whitley, James F. Kornegay and Silas Cox, who acted as clerk. The wheels of government worked slowly even then. On August 20, 1834, the wardens had selected a site. Jonathan Pike, a prominent Quaker and brother of Nathan Pike for whom Pikeville was named, had been elected to head the committee and he, on their behalf, purchased from James and Isaac Worrel, "two hundred and ten acres of lan situated in the neighborhood of Stoney Hill..." The price was $300 and provided for the support of James Worrel and his wife, during their natural lives. Worrell was 74 years old at the time.

Wayne County Will and Estate Records list James Worrell's estate probated in 1838. This would indicate that he died only five years after selling the above land to the county.
